

The Circular Flow of Resources, Goods, Service and Money Payments

One way of describing the overall operation of the entire economy is through a circular flow diagram such as the one on this page. This diagram presents a highly simplified overview of the combined economic system.

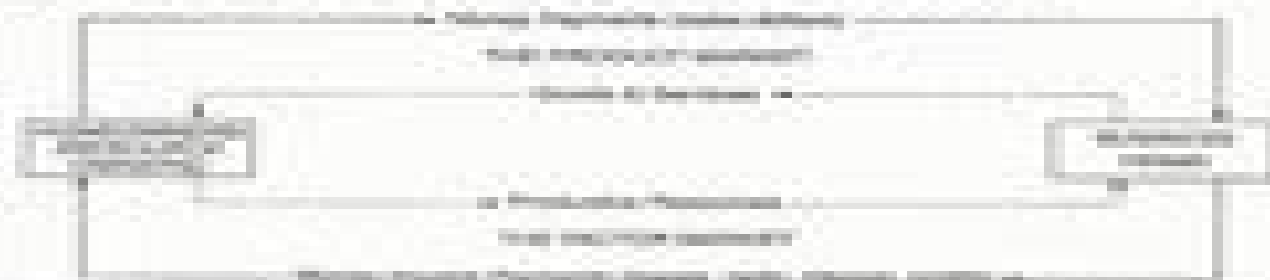

Businesses (producers) produce and sell products to supply the needs of their local, national and overseas customers. These products are exchanged for money income payments in the form of wages and salaries, interest, profits and profits. Owners of the businesses in turn use these income payments to purchase the finished goods and services supplied by the business firms. Business firms then use this proceeds from these sales to pay the various costs for the services the firms receive by employing the resources. This is how the circular flow of resources, goods and services, and money income payments is established and maintained.

Payments to the lower part of the diagram, which is sometimes called the factor market, represent income to the resource owners who sell productive resources. The flows from payments go out to only to the business firms that buy productive services.

Flows to the upper part of the diagram reflect payments for product markets, again as only to the resource owners who first goods and services. For these same payments appear as income to the business firms that sell goods and services.

The important point to emphasize is that all of the money payments shown in the diagram are then received by an intermediate set of owners, in a system of intermediate markets, where prices appear in a price system on many other prices. For example, the prices business owners are willing to pay for finished goods and services depend on the prices business firms receive for the use of their resources. The prices of resources, in turn, depend on business firms and willing to pay for the services the resource owners provide. The diagram shows that everything is connected in a system and business can't lose the connection between the market interactions that flow.
