There are two questions: Why was there a rise in the share of the population that was employed in the private sector in the 1980s, and why did the share of the population that was employed in the private sector fall in the 1990s? The answer to the first question is that the share of the population that was employed in the private sector was higher in the 1980s than in the 1990s. The answer to the second question is that the share of the population that was employed in the private sector was lower in the 1990s than in the 1980s.
