

Respiration Article & Follow-Up Questions

CELLULAR RESPIRATION

All living things need energy to survive and carry out life processes. Whether an organism makes its own food through photosynthesis or eats another organism for food, all organisms* use the same process to turn their food into usable energy. This process is called cellular respiration.

Mitochondrion

Cellular respiration is a chemical reaction that happens in an organelle called the mitochondrion (plural: mitochondria). Mitochondria are found in the cells of nearly every organism on Earth. While almost all cells in the human body contain mitochondria, cells that require a lot of energy, such as muscle cells, can contain hundreds or thousands of them.

All organisms need a source of food. In the cellular respiration, plants are performing photosynthesis to make glucose. Cells use glucose for energy. They break down glucose in a process called cellular respiration. The process of cellular respiration occurs in the mitochondria. It is a chemical reaction that breaks down glucose into carbon dioxide and water, releasing energy in the form of ATP.

Cellular respiration is a complex process that involves several steps. It begins with glycolysis, which occurs in the cytoplasm of the cell. Glycolysis breaks down glucose into two molecules of pyruvate. Pyruvate then enters the mitochondrion, where it is converted into acetyl-CoA. Acetyl-CoA enters the Krebs cycle, which releases carbon dioxide. The electrons from the Krebs cycle are used in the electron transport chain, which produces ATP. At the end of the process, the cell has harvested energy in the form of ATP. Carbon dioxide and water are produced as waste products from this reaction. In general, animals breathe out the waste products carbon dioxide and water (as water vapor) when they exhale. Plants use the carbon dioxide and water to perform photosynthesis to make more glucose for an energy source. Excess water may leave the plant stomata in a process called transpiration.

*There are some exceptions to this. Some organisms in extreme environments use a different process to generate energy.
