DNA Replication

Every cell in your body carries a complete set of genetic instructions encoded in DNA. Before a cell divides, it must replicate its DNA so that each daughter cell receives an identical copy. This process, called DNA replication, ensures genetic continuity.

The process begins at the replication fork, where the enzyme helicase unwinds and separates the DNA strands, breaking the hydrogen bonds between complementary base pairs. As the DNA unwinds, free nucleotides in the cell pair up with their complementary bases: adenine (A) pairs with thymine (T), and cytosine (C) pairs with guanine (G).

Two new DNA strands are formed: the leading strand, which is synthesized continuously, and the lagging strand, which is synthesized in short fragments called Okazaki fragments. The enzyme DNA polymerase adds nucleotides to build the new DNA strands and proofreads the sequence for errors. The result is two identical DNA molecules, each consisting of one original strand and one newly synthesized strand, a process known as semi-conservative replication.

DNA replication is essential for growth, development, and maintaining the genetic information in all living organisms. Any

How DNA Makes a Copy of Itself

DNA is the instruction manual for life. It tells cells how to grow, function, and make proteins. Before a cell divides, it must copy its DNA so the new cells get the same instructions. This process is called DNA replication.

DNA has two strands that fit together like a puzzle. Each strand is made of building blocks called nucleotides, which contain four different bases: adenine (A), thymine (T), cytosine (C), and guanine (G). The base A pairs with T, and C pairs with G.

DNA Replication

The copying process starts at the replication fork, where an enzyme called helicase unwinds and separates the two strands. Once the strands are open, another enzyme called DNA polymerase helps attach new nucleotides to each strand. This makes two new strands that match the original DNA.

One strand, called the leading strand, is built smoothly in one piece. The other strand, called the lagging strand, is built in small chunks called Okazaki fragments. DNA polymerase also checks for mistakes to make sure the new DNA is correct.

When the process is finished, two exact copies of DNA are made. Each new DNA molecule has one old strand and one new strand. This is called semi-conservative replication, and it helps prevent
