Abstract: Classification and regression trees (CART) have been widely used in forest science. However, the use of CART in forest science has been limited by the lack of a good software package. This paper presents a new software package, called 'CART-forest', which is designed for forest science. The package is written in R and is available for free download from the Internet. The package includes a user-friendly graphical user interface (GUI) and a command-line interface. The GUI is designed for non-programmers and the command-line interface is designed for programmers. The package includes a number of functions for data manipulation, model building, model evaluation, and model interpretation. The package is easy to use and can be used on a wide range of data sets. The package is available for free download from the Internet at <http://www.cba.hawaii.edu/~carter/cart-forest/>.

1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to define the problem clearly. This involves understanding the current situation, identifying the gap between the current state and the desired state, and determining the scope of the problem.

2. Once the problem is defined, the next step is to gather information. This involves collecting data, identifying relevant stakeholders, and understanding the context of the problem.

3. The third step is to analyze the information. This involves identifying the causes of the problem, understanding the relationships between different factors, and determining the most significant issues.

4. The fourth step is to develop a plan. This involves identifying potential solutions, evaluating the pros and cons of each solution, and selecting the most appropriate solution.

5. The fifth step is to implement the plan. This involves putting the chosen solution into action, monitoring progress, and making adjustments as needed.

6. The final step is to evaluate the results. This involves assessing the effectiveness of the solution, identifying any remaining issues, and determining the next steps.

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to determine what consumers want and what problems they are facing.
