3. Intentionally—voluntarily, by a conscious act, attributable to the defendant's volitional control. Intention is not required to be aimed at a particular result. The defendant can intend to bring about a result, even if the actual occurrence of that result was not exactly what the defendant intended. For example, a defendant who shoots a gun at a crowd of people, intending to kill one of them, may be liable for the death of another person who was killed by the bullet.
