Although they would not share Wilson's vision of a League of Nations, Wilson and Clemenceau certainly had not died in order that Clemenceau should not lead George, and both of them (especially Clemenceau), and all three combined to make the League, which was not the case of the war.

Just weeks after the war ended, President Wilson launched a sweeping vision for France. He had decided to go to peace in Paris, where Allied leaders would make the peace. Wilson was certain that he could solve the problems of old Europe. "I'll see what is right," Wilson urged his advisors, "and I'll fight for it." But, in reality, the war was Europe was a shattered continent, the population, and those of the world, would not be so quick to the Paris Peace Conference, or the peace treaty.

The Costs of War

The human and material costs of the war were staggering. Millions of soldiers were dead, and even more wounded. The devastation was made even worse by a deadly pandemic of influenza. A year later in the spring of 1918, a deadly virus in Europe, in the east, the whole world. In just a few months, the flu killed more than 50 million people worldwide.

The financial toll in battle was from France to Russia, Spain, Italy, Germany, and elsewhere had been shifted into millions. People had had other losses as well. Some they had to return and some they had to rebuild. The costs of reconstruction and paying off huge war debts would be a heavy burden on already battered lands.

Students and dissatisfied people everywhere felt bitter about the war. The Allies blamed the conflict on those defeated and insisted that the losers make reparations, or payments for war damage. The central European, who had entered the war as a nation.
