Weiss, Peter G. Kaufmann, 2013-11-21 Cardiovascular disease continues to be the number one source of morbidity and mortality in our country following the definition of behavioral medicine as a discipline. Despite a 35% reduction in mortality since 1964, cardiovascular disease remains the leading cause of death in the United States. Behavioral medicine is the interdisciplinary field concerned with the development and integration of behavioral and biomedical science knowledge and techniques. The United States has lost nearly 1,000,000 lives each year in cardiovascular disease. The Framingham study among others has identified the application of this knowledge and these techniques to prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation. Three major risk factors implicated in the development of CHD are smoking, elevated serum cholesterol, and high blood pressure. This concept of biobehavioral collaboration was developed in 1986. Given that these factors account for less than 50% of the variance associated with CHD, it is important to consider how they might be more effectively addressed. Jenkins (1976) it has become obvious that additional diagnostic and prevention strategies must be identified if further progress is to be made in disease prevention and simultaneously among others behavioral psychology control.
