

Chapter 2

From Conception to Birth

Genes and Chromosomes

- Conception begins as a zygote, single cell formed from the union of two gametes: sperm and ovum
 - Homozygous: referring to two genes of one pair that are exactly the same in every letter in their code. Most gene pairs are homozygous
- DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid): the chemical composition of the molecules that contain the genes, which are the chemical instructions for cells to manufacture various proteins
- Chromosome: one of the 46 molecules of DNA that virtually every cell of the human body contains and that contain all of the genes. Other creatures has fewer or more chromosomes
 - Humans have 21,000 genes
 - 46 chromosomes, which are arranged in 23 pairs
 - not in a gamete (otherwise called a reproductive chromosome)

Variations among people

- Allele: a variation that makes a gene different in some way from other genes for the same characteristics. Many genes never vary; others have several possible alleles
 - Heterozygous: referring to two genes of one pair that differ in some way. Typically one allele has only a few base pairs that differ from the other member of the pair

Triplets: set of three three pairs where each specifies production of one of 20 possible amino acids

Genetic expression can be important whether or not a gene is expressed, which means that it becomes active in forming the person

- No single genes for homosexuality, just combinations of it

Myelination alters genes and continues throughout life

- Microbiome: all of the microbes with all of their genes in a community
- Copy number variations: the various repeats of deletions of base pairs that genes have
 - Everyone has them, correlates with every disease and conditions

Genotype and Phenotype

- Genotype: a collection of genes within a person
- Phenotype: person's actual appearance and behavior; observable characteristics of a person
