“This I Believe Essays”

Until last summer I had a very comfortable life: winter vacations skiing and summer cruises. My parents spent a lot of money on a private prep school, so they could get me into a competitive middle school, followed by the uber-expensive high school. Everything was about tomorrow, next year, my graduation. We never had to worry about today.

Before last summer I never thought much about the people in the world who live day to day, every day, whose lives are controlled by poverty and hunger. Then I enrolled in a two-week intensive program sponsored by Heifer International. We lived in a “Tribal Village,” in a hot, dry open grassland in Arkansas. I know it was only a simulation, that I could go back to my regular life, but the experience gave birth to a belief in helping others. Today,

I am a tribal member in Mozambique. Every meal, I make the fire for my family, and feel the flames lick up my nostrils as I blow to keep the fuel alive. I cook mush with vegetables. This is all my family is ever given.

I feed the hen and three rabbits their dinner. I grow attached to the rabbits, even though I know I shouldn't. I name them.

We are living in a house that feels like an oven with no air conditioning like I am used to, and even though water is available, everyone is too hot and tired to move. I go to the kitchen — an area of dirt floor — to make the fire for breakfast. Again I stir and eat the same unfulfilling mush. It's a bad dream, over and over and over again. My lungs fill up with smoke, ash blocks my vision, and I can almost see through the eyes of people who really live like this every single day with no hope for change.

I'm not getting enough to eat; it's time to decide whether or not to kill the rabbits. I feel pain but it's a privileged child's pain because I know I will soon be eating again. That's not true for a lot of other children around the world.

Growing up comfortably in the U.S., I've never had to worry about my dinner, and even though this whole process was only a simulation, it changed my life. Now I believe in doing whatever I can to help find practical ways to defeat hunger. Today, So I've become president of Roots and Shoots, a group working to improve local environments for people and animals. I'm also working to create a program at my high school called the “Safe Passage” trip, to help young people in the Guatemala City dump. And I've got plans to do more.

If I ever feel lethargic, I remember laboring in the hot sun and think of the millions who still do. Now, I try to live for today and stop worrying so much about the future. When I eat or feel full, I am grateful for this fortunate life and want to extend the same feeling to others.

I believe in offering help to those who need it. Right now.

Collected Papers V. Phenomenology and the Social Sciences Alfred Schutz, 2011-08-31 This book shows how phenomenology of the social sciences differs from positivistic approaches and presents Schutz's theory of relevance as a key feature of his own phenomenology of the social world. It begins with Schutz's appraisal of how Husserl influenced him and continues with exchanges between Schutz and Eric Voegelin, Felix Kaufmann, Aron Gurwitsch, and Talcott Parsons. This book presents for the first time Schutz's incisive criticisms of T. S. Eliot's theory of culture. Essays of Elia and Eliana Charles Lamb, 1903

Hollander, 2017-04-13 The new U.S. national standards movement has pushed us at warp speed from Common Core curriculum standards to updated assessments for college readiness but we have not fully examined what it means to be college ready. Why is it that roughly half of all high school students need remedial classes before being considered ready for college level work? Current public policies aim to eliminate the need for remedial college classes by ratcheting up instruction and expectations at the K-12 level but if we do not find out what these students are missing how can we expect to be successful? For higher education scholars and practitioners and those generally interested in the future of college this book helps tell a novel story about the transition to college from the perspective of an experienced college professor. The first year experience is conceptualized as a two-way relationship between students and colleges involving introductions, resistance or acceptance, collaboration and exchange of ideas and learning. There are both success stories and stories that end in a parting of ways. These stories show what college readiness really means and offer valuable insights about the academic, social, monetary and other forces that can overwhelm the typical college-bound student. Higher education scholars and professionals will benefit from these rich and detailed accounts as they help shape the landscape of 21st century college readiness. The Standard, 1903 Miscellaneous Essays Mathew Carey, 1830 Life, Letters, and Writings Charles Lamb, 1882 A sketch of the life of Charles Lamb, by Sir Thomas Noon Talfourd.
