
"The actions of individual leaders had a significant impact on the development of the Cold War". Discuss with reference to two leaders, each from a different region.

Both Truman and Stalin had a significant impact on the development of the cold war as they acted in their independent capacity to further their country's personal interests. Truman presided over the beginning of the Cold War, and, with his commitment to the policy of containment sparked international involvement and established the US Cold War position for the duration of the Cold War. Although other administrations developed their own interpretations of US-Soviet relations, preventing the spread of communism remained a cornerstone of subsequent US policies. Stalin's post-war occupation of eastern Europe alarmed the United States and led to the formation of the US policy of containment. The 1948 Berlin Blockade was seen as proof of Soviet aggression and the existence of the Cominform confirmed to western powers that Moscow directed all the actions of communist countries.

Truman played a crucial role in the development of the Cold War by introducing a hardline foreign policy, contrasting with previous isolationism. In 1947, the Truman Doctrine was initiated which stated that the USA would provide military and economic means to stop the spread of communism and contain the USSR. This was followed by the Marshall plan which led the US to invest $13 billion into numerous European countries in an effort to rehabilitate the economies and create stable conditions in which democratic institutions could survive in the aftermath of WW2. Historian Fleming argues that the Truman Doctrine was "a formalization of the long-term goals of Truman himself". The US felt threatened by Stalin's ambitions for world domination and used the policy to make their intentions and opinions very clear to the USSR. This showed Stalin, that the USA would remain in Europe and always protect it against Communism. The Truman Doctrine was the fundamental reason for the long-term conflicts between America and the Soviet Union, and for the outbreak of the Cold War.

President Truman also contributed to expanding cold war tensions to Asia with America's involvement in the Korean war. America's initial objective in the Korean conflict was to restore South Korea's border at the 38th parallel after North Korea's invasion. However, after the Inchon landing in September 1950, the US decided to cross that parallel and unify Korea under capitalism. This change of policy prompted direct Chinese military intervention. This prolonged the Korean conflict, which could have been a short civil war, into a three year war ultimately involving not only the UN forces but the Chinese forces, with devastating results for the Korean peninsula. While the USA successfully contained the North Koreans and re-established the 38th parallel as the dividing line between North and South Korea, it led to the implementation of NSC 68 which effectively globalized and militarized the cold war by giving the go ahead to substantially increased spending by the US on the military.

Stalin holds equal significance to Truman on the development of the cold war because it was Stalin who began most of the crises. Stalin used 'Salami tactics' to spread communism, initiated the Berlin Blockade and unnecessarily gave North Korea the 'Green Light' to allow them to attack South Korea. Stalin was taking over Eastern Europe through "Salami tactics" which included alliance systems and threats to rival countries. These tactics also broke Stalin's promise of free, democratic elections which he had agreed to in postwar conferences. This led to increased mistrust and tensions between the superpowers. When Czechoslovakia became communist in March of 1948, the US responded with the Truman Doctrine, which is believed by many historians to have been the official declaration of the Cold War.

Historian Tony Judt argues that Stalin's biggest mistake was not accepting Marshall Aid - there was nothing that was stopping him from accepting it. He could have helped to rebuild Germany in way in which everyone else had supported, he could have gotten allies for example France. Instead, Stalin responded with the creation of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), a centralized agency that linked eastern bloc countries for Moscow, and Cominform which increased Stalin's control over communist parties of other countries. This significantly increased tensions with the west who was concerned that this organization would actively spread communism which played a role in the creation of NATO in 1949. Furthermore, Stalin chose to create the war for his own domestic policies. This can be seen in 1948, when Stalin began the Berlin blockade, partially in response to the Marshall Plan which resulted in the permanent division of Germany and sparked future conflicts such as the Korean War.

In conclusion, the actions of both Truman and Stalin had a significant impact on the development of the cold war, as they provoked each other and escalated tensions between the USA and USSR, leading to more war and bloodshed. Truman's impact came through his foreign policy of containment which became the foundation of US actions and intervention in the Cold war. In contrast, Stalin impacted the development of the cold war through "salami tactics"
