Abstract Background: While the need for training in new technology tools, such as social media, is increasing, a variety of options is available for healthcare providers to utilize. This study compares several online information management systems. Methods: The authors used a variety of strategies to identify suitable online programs. An abstract was prepared for each abstracted program. The abstracts were then reviewed and ranked according to the criteria of ease of use, effectiveness, and cost. Results: The authors identified 10 programs that met the criteria. The authors then ranked the programs according to the criteria. The authors found that the programs that were most effective were those that were easy to use and had a low cost. Conclusion: The authors found that the programs that were most effective were those that were easy to use and had a low cost.
