

Determination of proration requirements for immigrants and emigrants

In the year a taxpayer immigrates to Canada, or emigrates from Canada, they must meet the 90% rule for the period of non-residency to be allowed full non-refundable tax credits for the year. For the part of the year the taxpayer was not a resident of Canada, if Canadian sourced income, excluding income subject to Part XIII tax, represents 90% or more of their net world income, they may claim full non-refundable credits. Otherwise, their non-refundable credits must be prorated according to the percentage that the number of days they were resident in Canada was of the whole taxation year.
