Energy cannot be created or destroyed. However, it can transform from one form into another. For example, when you turn on a fan, the electrical energy is transformed into mechanical energy. The mechanical energy is then transformed into thermal energy. The thermal energy is then transformed into light energy.

Energy can be transferred from one object to another. For example, when you turn on a light, the electrical energy is transferred from the power source to the light bulb. The light bulb then transforms the electrical energy into light energy.

Energy can change from one form to another. For example, if a ball is thrown in the air, the mechanical energy is transformed into potential energy. The potential energy is then transformed into kinetic energy as the ball falls.

Here are some other examples of energy transformations:

Input	Output	Energy Transformation
Electrical Energy	Light Energy	Light Bulb
Mechanical Energy	Thermal Energy	Engine
Chemical Energy	Electrical Energy	Battery
