

Mammalian Heart Dissection Guide

From Carolina Biological Supply

Planning Laboratory and Physiology

Overview

There is a great deal of homology in the dissecting mammalian hearts. With each type of heart there will be differences as to the size of the pericardial cavity below the lungs, but the general structure and basic relative location will be the same in every animal. Follow each laboratory procedure while performing your dissection. Observing gross anatomy, arteries, veins, and lymphatics while dissecting. The three dissections are a dissecting frog, an opossum, and a rabbit. The rabbit will be using a large dissection tray, such as a dissection tray, a dissecting pan, and a dissecting pan.

Procedure

1. Dissection that proceeds as the first of the dissections, pericardial cavity, is the dissection of the heart. Below are a general reference to your dissection and identify anatomical structures.

2. Identify the heart and observe the heart. The heart is a muscular organ that pumps blood. The heart is located in the chest cavity. The heart is composed of four chambers: the right atrium, the right ventricle, the left atrium, and the left ventricle. The right atrium is the upper right chamber, and the right ventricle is the lower right chamber. The left atrium is the upper left chamber, and the left ventricle is the lower left chamber. The heart is surrounded by a pericardial cavity. The heart is connected to the lungs and the rest of the body by blood vessels. The heart is the central organ of the circulatory system.
