

1. First, let's take a look at Queen Victoria's son Leopold's family (see Figure 2).
- 2) His daughter, Alice of Athlone, had one hemophilic son (Rupert) and two other children—a boy and a girl—whose status is unknown.

Questions

- (a) What is the probability that her other son was hemophiliac?
 (b) What is the probability that her daughter was a carrier? Hemophiliac?
 (c) What is the probability that both children were normal?
- Fortunately, Leopold was not a hemophiliac.

Fortunately, Leopold was the only one of Victoria's sons who suffered from hemophilia. Her other three sons, Edward, Alfred, and Arthur, were unaffected. Since the present royal family of England descended from Edward VII, the first son, it is free from hemophilia. Louise, Queen Victoria's fourth daughter and sixth child, did not have children and her status as a carrier cannot be assessed. Vicky, the first child, and Helena, the fifth child, had children, none of whom was hemophilic, indicating that the mothers probably were not carriers.

2. Now for the Spanish connection: Victoria's youngest child, Beatrice, gave birth to one daughter, one normal son, and two hemophilic sons (see Figure 3).

Questions

- Looking at the pedigree of the royal family, identify which of Beatrice's children received the hemophilic gene; why can you make this conclusion?
- Notice that Beatrice's daughter, Eugenie, married King Alfonso XIII of Spain and had six children, one of whom was the father of Juan Carlos, the current King of Spain. Would you predict that Juan Carlos was normal, a carrier, or a hemophilic?

3. Queen Victoria's third child, Alice, passed hemophilia to the German and Russian imperial families (see Figure 4, next page). Of Alice's six children, three were afflicted with hemophilia. At the age of three, her son Frederick bled for three agonizing days from a cut on the ear. Eventually, the flow of blood was stanchied. But a few months later, while playing boisterously in his mother's window and fell to the terrace below. By the evening he was dead.

Alice's daughter Irene, a carrier, married her first cousin, Prince Henry of Prussia, and gave birth to two hemophilic sons. Every attempt was made to conceal the fact that the dreaded disease had shown itself in the German imperial family, but, at the age of four, Waldemar, the youngest of the princes, bled to death. The other prince, Henry, died at the age of fifty-six.

Alice's other daughter, Alix, was also a carrier. Had she accepted the offer of marriage from Prince Eddy, or his brother George, hemophilia would have been re-introduced into the reigning branch of the British royal family. But Alexandra (Alix) married Tsar Nikolas II instead and carried the disease into the Russian imperial family. She had four daughters, Olga, Tatiana, Marie, and Anastasia, before giving birth to the long-awaited son, Alexis, heir to the Russian throne. These children, along with their parents, were eventually murdered during the Russian Revolution. Within a few months of his birth, his parents realized that their precious and only son, Alexis, had hemophilia. The first sign had been some unexpected bleeding from the navel, which had stopped after a few days. Much more serious,
