The Journal of Cancer Research ,1936 Program and Abstracts ,2000 When Children Die Institute of Medicine,Board on Health Sciences Policy,Committee on Palliative and End-of-Life Care for Children and Their Families,2003-02-09 The death of a child is a special sorrow No matter the circumstances a child s death is a life altering experience Except for the child who dies suddenly and without forewarning physicians nurses and other medical personnel usually play a central role in the lives of children who die and their families At best these professionals will exemplify medicine with a heart At worst families encounters with the health care system will leave them with enduring painful memories anger and regrets When Children Die examines what we know about the needs of these children and their families the extent to which such needs are and are not being met and what can be done to provide more competent compassionate and consistent care The book offers recommendations for involving child patients in treatment decisions communicating with parents strengthening the organization and delivery of services developing support programs for bereaved families improving public and private insurance training health professionals and more It argues that taking these steps will improve the care of children who survive as well as those who do not and will likewise help all families who suffer with their seriously ill or injured child Featuring illustrative case histories the book discusses patterns of childhood death and explores the basic elements of physical emotional spiritual and practical care for children and families experiencing a child s life threatening and Evaluation of Education and Self-Care in Patients with Head and Neck Cancer Anne Söderlund Schaller,2018-04-13 It is not unusual for patients with head and neck cancer HNC to suffer from both tumor and treatment related pain that is difficult to alleviate despite individualized pharmacological treatment The presence of concomitant various dimensions of pain in patients during the often difficult period following radiotherapy RT has not been elucidated Several aspects concerning the importance of relatives for HNC patients have been addressed However little attention has been given to how relatives perceive patients with HNC pain and it is important to further elucidate this sparsely studied topic Knowledge about health related quality of life HR QoL in this patient group during early RT is limited and needs to be assessed in relation to diagnosis and treatment Self care SC refers to what patients do on their own to achieve maintain and promote optimal health and may help reduce pain for several pain conditions The impact of patient education and SC on pain and other common HNC symptoms need further clarification The aims of this thesis were to describe experiences and perceptions of pain in patients with HNC shortly after RT to describe how relatives perceived the patient's situation especially concerning pain and how they experienced their own situation to identify factors that impact HR QoL during early RT to develop effective pain management strategies maintain activities of daily living and promote HR QoL in patients with HNC undergoing RT using patient education and SC instruction In paper I patients with HNC described existential pain expressed as fear of death meaninglessness and guilt already during and shortly after RT Physical pain psychological distress and social withdrawal played a significant role Patients with HNC who were treated with RT should also proactively be offered treatment for the various dimensions of pain In paper II relatives described their mental stress in response to a challenging situation that required their active support to help ease the patient's difficult condition The interviews with relatives also revealed a lack of personal knowledge and frustration over the inability to participate in patient care as well as inadequate support from the healthcare system Early interventions from the healthcare system on behalf of the relatives may be necessary to meet these needs In Paper III regression models revealed that pain intensity and symptoms of depression adversely affected HR QoL in patients with HNC during early RT Customized prehabilitation programs aimed at preventing pain and symptoms of depression could help preserve good HR QoL Paper IV assessed individual patient education and SC initiatives that resulted in a tendency for lower pain intensity during a portion of RT One way to potentially enhance the benefits of education and SC could be to improve for example patient motivation and self efficacy as well as to optimize supportive efforts from caregivers In conclusion by identifying factors that can impact HR QoL and evaluating the effect of patient education and SC this thesis contributes to knowledge on perceived pain and the patient's situation during and shortly after RT in patients with HNC and their relatives This thesis points to the need for evaluation and further development of patient education and effective SC strategies for pain in patients with HNC undergoing RT as well as for development and evaluation of support strategies for patients with pain and their families during and after RT
