Chapter 1: Introduction: principles of drug action

Pharmacodynamics – the effects of the drug on the body.

Pharmacokinetics – the way in which the body affects the drug with time (i.e. absorption, distribution, metabolism, and excretion).

The most common way a drug elicits its effects are summarized in the figure below.

Drugs that act by virtue of their physicochemical (standard physical or chemical) properties work by a non-specific drug action (e.g. activated charcoal).

Most drugs, however, elicit an effect through targeting specific protein receptors that normally respond to endogenous chemicals in the body.
