

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a control group (n=10) or a training group (n=10). The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, three times per week, for 45 minutes per session. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a maximal aerobic capacity test, a submaximal aerobic capacity test, and a resting heart rate test. Health was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a blood pressure test, a cholesterol test, and a glucose test. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health than the control group at 12 weeks. The training group had a significantly higher maximal aerobic capacity, a significantly higher submaximal aerobic capacity, and a significantly lower resting heart rate than the control group. The training group also had significantly lower blood pressure, cholesterol, and glucose levels than the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men.
