

The Order of Reaction

Effect of Concentration

Introduction

Why does a candle burn more brightly in pure oxygen than it does in air? Oxygen is a reactant in the combustion reaction that takes place when the candle burns. The rate of the reaction, and thus the brightness of the flame, depends on the concentration of oxygen. In this experiment, the effect of concentration on the rate of a chemical reaction will be investigated. The mathematical relationship between the rate and the concentration of a reactant will also be determined.

Concepts

- Reaction rate
- Rate law
- Order of reaction
- Iodine clock reaction

Background

The rate of a reaction describes how fast the reaction occurs—the greater the rate, the less time that is needed for reactants to be converted to products. Reaction rates are therefore inversely proportional to time (rate  $\propto 1/\text{time}$ ). In general, the rate of a reaction increases as the concentration of reactants increases. The relationship between the rate of a reaction and the concentration of reactants is expressed in a mathematical equation called a rate law. For a general reaction of the form:

the rate law can be written as

$$\text{Rate} = k[A]^m[B]^n$$

where  $k$  is the rate constant,  $[A]$  and  $[B]$  are the molar concentrations of the reactants, and  $m$  and  $n$  are exponents that define how the rate depends on the individual reactant concentrations.

The exponents  $m$  and  $n$  are also referred to as the order of reaction with respect to each reactant. In the previous example, the reaction is said to be nth order in  $A$  and mth order in  $B$ . In general,  $m$  and  $n$  will be positive whole numbers—typical values of  $m$  and  $n$  are 0, 1, and 2. Note that when  $n = 0$ , the rate does not depend on the concentration of the reactant. When  $n = 1$ , the reaction will occur twice as fast when the reactant concentration is doubled, and when  $n = 2$ , the rate will occur four (2<sup>2</sup>) times as fast when the reactant concentration is doubled. The values of the exponents must be determined by experiment—they cannot be predicted simply by looking at the balanced chemical equation.

Consider, for example, the reaction of hydrogen peroxide with iodide ions to give water and iodine (Equation 1). The general rate law for this reaction is given in Equation 2.

$$\text{Rate} = k[H_2O_2]^m[I^-]^n[H^+]^p \quad \text{Equation 2}$$

The order of reaction with respect to hydrogen peroxide—the value of  $m$ —can be determined by measuring the rate of the reaction for several different initial concentrations of hydrogen peroxide. If the concentrations of the other reactants are not changed, the rate will depend only on the concentration of  $H_2O_2$  and the value of  $m$ . The general rate law for the reaction will reduce to the form:

$$\text{Rate} = k' [H_2O_2]^m \quad \text{Equation 3}$$

where the constant  $k'$  includes the  $[I^-]^n$  and  $[H^+]^p$  terms.

Experiment Overview

The purpose of this microscale experiment is to investigate the effect of hydrogen peroxide concentration on the rate of its reaction with iodide ions and to determine the reaction order in hydrogen peroxide.

A series of hydrogen peroxide solutions having different concentrations will be prepared. A special microscale “shakerclock” technique will be used to mix the hydrogen peroxide solutions with the other reactants—iodide ions, a buffer and starch. The buffer is used to maintain a constant concentration of  $H^+$  ions. Starch, which forms a characteristic dark blue complex with iodine, is added as an indicator to signal when a specified amount of iodine has been formed. The time needed for the reaction to occur, from the time of mixing to the time when the blue color suddenly appears, will be measured and used to calculate the reaction rate. Reactions involving iodine and starch are called iodine clock reactions—the blue color appears suddenly like an alarm clock ringing.
