Abstract: The objective of this study was to determine the effect of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness of young women. Twenty-four female students were randomly divided into two groups: control group (CG) and experimental group (EG). The EG performed a 6-week training program consisting of aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. Physical fitness was assessed at baseline and after 6 weeks using a battery of tests including heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and various physical performance measures. Results showed significant improvements in all measured variables for the EG compared to the CG. These findings suggest that a structured 6-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness of young women.
