

When the switch is closed, the circuit is complete and the light bulb will glow.

The circuit is a series circuit, meaning that the current flows through each component in sequence. In this case, the current flows from the positive terminal of the battery, through the switch, then through the light bulb, and finally back to the negative terminal of the battery.

The light bulb glows because the electric current causes the filament inside the bulb to heat up and emit light.

This simple circuit demonstrates the basic principles of electricity and how it can be used to power a device. It is a fundamental concept in physics and engineering.

When the switch is closed, the circuit is complete and the light bulbs will glow.

The circuit is a series circuit, meaning that the current flows through each component in sequence. In this case, the current flows from the positive terminal of the battery, through the switch, then through the first light bulb, then through the second light bulb, and finally back to the negative terminal of the battery.

The light bulbs glow because the electric current causes the filaments inside the bulbs to heat up and emit light.

This circuit demonstrates how multiple devices can be connected in a series circuit and still function properly.
