

PROTEIN SYNTHESIS

TRANSLATION

1. Translation is the process of synthesizing a protein from an mRNA template. The mRNA template is read in groups of three bases called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid.

2. During translation, the ribosome moves along the mRNA template, reading the codons and adding the corresponding amino acids to the growing polypeptide chain.

3. The process of translation continues until the ribosome reaches a stop codon, at which point the completed polypeptide chain is released.

THE GENETIC CODE

"One codon at a time"

1. Biological systems use sequences of three nucleotides to specify the amino acids that are used to build proteins. These sequences are called codons.

2. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid, and the sequence of codons in an mRNA molecule determines the sequence of amino acids in a protein.

3. The genetic code is universal, meaning that the same codon codes for the same amino acid in all organisms. This allows for the transfer of genetic information between different species.

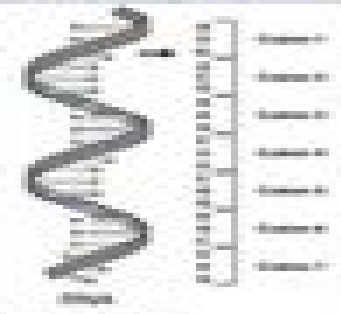

4. The genetic code is also redundant, meaning that multiple codons can code for the same amino acid.

"One gene - one protein"

1. Each gene contains the instructions for building a specific protein. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene determines the sequence of codons in the mRNA molecule, which in turn determines the sequence of amino acids in the protein.

2. The genetic code is a set of rules that allows us to translate the sequence of nucleotides in a gene into the sequence of amino acids in a protein.

3. A copy of the genetic code can be found on page 119.
