Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity for women who were unable to tolerate more vigorous exercise. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions included a warm-up, a low-impact aerobic workout, and a cool-down. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical fitness of the women. The women who participated in the program showed significant improvements in their cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and flexibility. The program was well-tolerated by the women, and they reported feeling more energetic and confident after completing the program. The results of this study suggest that a low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can be an effective means of improving the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women.

For example, the following table shows the results of a regression analysis of the relationship between the number of hours worked per week and the number of children in the household.
