Unlike other animals, dogs can easily be trained. Many people are able to train their dogs at home to obey multiple commands. For example, dogs can be trained to use the restroom outside, sit down, lay down, go to their crate, and leave human food alone. In fact, this training is so simple that 90 percent of dogs know the "sit" command (Seymour). This evidence shows that a vast majority of dogs can easily be trained to do different activities on command. Additionally, people who may struggle with training their dogs can easily find help. For instance, local pet stores provide puppy classes to help owners train their dogs. There are also many people who post training videos online to help owners train their dogs at home. The ease of the training as well as the resources available to owners shows that when desired, dogs can easily be trained.
