Background: A recent study comparing the effects of a 12-week group-based cognitive behavioral intervention (CBT) to a 12-week individual CBT on the self-reported health status of people with a recent diagnosis of type 2 diabetes (T2D) found that the group-based CBT had a greater effect on self-reported health status than the individual CBT. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of the group-based CBT on the self-reported health status of people with a recent diagnosis of T2D.

Abstract and keywords: Abstract: This synthesis of two experiments with young children, aged 3-5 years, examined the effects of the presentation of the narrative. The children were presented with a story and a picture of the story. The children were then asked to draw a picture of the story. The results showed that the children who were presented with the story and the picture together, drew a picture that was more similar to the picture of the story than the children who were presented with the story alone.
