Abstract. Despite recognition of students' diverse linguistic backgrounds and needs, opportunities are constrained. Research has shown that students' linguistic backgrounds and needs are often viewed as an obstacle to learning rather than a resource. Students' linguistic backgrounds are often a source of pride and strength. When students' linguistic backgrounds are considered only as a barrier to learning, it is not only disrespectful to their backgrounds but also may hinder students' ability to learn. When students' linguistic backgrounds are viewed as a resource, it is not only respectful but also may enhance students' ability to learn. This paper discusses the importance of students' linguistic backgrounds and the role of the teacher in supporting students' linguistic backgrounds.
