Light itself is characterized as a stream or ray that travels in straight lines if the case of homogeneous propagation; whereas when it is affected by refraction or reflection, light rays bending in the medium that it is (inter-refraction is a different matter, just as it is not correct to say that water is bent (bending) for the same reason). It is this latter matter that is also transparent, just as the light will pass through it, but the inner matter (change of the process is made of the medium) will cause an interference between the two rays of refraction.

Law of Reflection - the same principle, stating that when a light ray strikes a mirror, the angle of incidence, θ_i , is equal to the angle of reflection, θ_r . The light ray is measured from the normal, the line off the surface. This is true for all surfaces, curved surfaces which light rays bounce off at various points, like those that form a concave or convex mirror. It is important to remember, as usual, that the reflected ray is either coming to or going from a surface, not just reflecting off it.
