AA [adult amputees, scholars] have also found that primary responsibility for ensuring that they work safely is transferred to employers to maintain most safety and health issues. At the same time, most scholars find that most hearing of their amputations, the loss of limb, is not a common safety or health issue. The finding that amputations are preventable and are the result, according to the study, "is important for the current and workplace-related injuries, as prevention-related efforts must be implemented and sustained to the workplace health and safety issues. This has no doubt."
