

SHARON SHAW

When I was a young girl, I was always drawn to the stories of angels. I would often imagine myself as one of those celestial beings, with long, flowing robes and a halo. I would spend hours looking at pictures of angels in books and magazines, and I would often draw them myself. I would imagine them as powerful, graceful creatures, capable of great feats of strength and courage. I would imagine them as protectors, guardians, and guides, always watching over me and helping me when I was in need. I would imagine them as beautiful, ethereal beings, with long, flowing hair and sparkling eyes. I would imagine them as gentle, loving creatures, always ready to comfort me and give me a hug. I would imagine them as wise, powerful beings, always ready to help me and guide me. I would imagine them as the most beautiful, most powerful, most loving, and most wise of all creatures. I would imagine them as the most beautiful, most powerful, most loving, and most wise of all creatures.
