Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications ,1967 Geological Survey Professional Paper Geological Survey (U.S.),1982 Monitoring Educational Performance in the Caribbean Emanuela Di Gropello,2003-01-01

This study represents a first attempt of providing a comprehensive quantification of educational outcomes in the Caribbean region. Its main objectives are a) to define a set of operationally relevant education indicators, b) to provide a database of comparable education indicators in Caribbean countries where data is available, namely Belize, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago, and c) to propose methods on how the common set of indicators can be used for analyses of the education sectors. This exercise is all the more important within the framework of the current Education For All (EFA) and Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) initiatives which require the identification and monitoring of relevant indicators to establish where the countries stand in relation to the target of universal primary education. After a systematic review of educational indicators in coverage, efficiency, and quality, which leads to specific recommendations on the type of indicator relevant to operational diagnostics of the education sectors, the study provides a detailed review of the Caribbean status in producing education indicators and demonstrates how a new database can be used to depict where the education sectors stand. Building on these methods and findings, its final section presents a set of specific recommendations to the Caribbean countries on how to improve the diagnostics of their education sectors.

Cross-Cultural Practice Sharon-Ann Gopaul-McNicol, Janet Brice-Baker, 1998

Developed primarily in the consulting rooms and universities of Europe and North America, traditional forms of psychological assessment and treatment are not up to the task of dealing with today's culturally diverse patients. In an increasingly multicultural society where basic terms such as normality and family can have radically varying definitions, it is not unusual for well-meaning clinicians to inadvertently misclassify unfamiliar behaviors or beliefs as abnormal or pathological. Ultimately, the solution lies in educational reform. In the meantime, a major first step toward ensuring that ethnically different patients receive quality mental health services is the adoption of culturally sensitive assessment and intervention models such as those described in this pathbreaking book. The culmination of its authors' many years of experience in working with culturally diverse patients, this timely guide arms practitioners with an array of innovative yet clinically grounded approaches to psychological assessment, intervention, and training. With the help of numerous case examples drawn from their work with Asian, Caribbean, African American, and Hispanic clients, Drs. Gopaul-McNicol and Brice-Baker illustrate a four-step approach that entails assessing problems within their familial and sociocultural contexts and then tailoring interventions that take full advantage of the religious, social, educational, familial, and legal institutions that shape an individual's experiences and beliefs. The authors begin with a trenchant critique of traditional mental health training in which they expose built-in cultural and historical biases that effectively hobble a trainee's ability to think multiculturally. They next explore a range of assessment issues, describe clinically validated techniques for treating culturally diverse children, parents, and couples, and outline best practices in report writing for linguistically and culturally diverse clients. In their discussion of clinical issues that arise when dealing with culturally diverse families, they detail a proven Multicultural Multimodal Multisystems Multi-CMS approach to intervention Returning to the topic of education in the final section they outline the major competencies needed to develop a trainee s multicultural skills and offer valuable training suggestions for professors and clinical supervisors Describing a dynamic new approach to cross cultural assessment and treatment Cross Cultural Practice is valuable reading for both professionals and students in mental health A dynamic new approach to cross cultural assessment and treatment The Global Village presaged by Marshall McLuhan in the 1960s has arrived with a vengeance For many mental health professionals this brings with it the daunting challenge of working with patients with a vast array of beliefs values customs and behaviors This groundbreaking book helps clinicians meet the challenge of assessing and treating diverse clients by arming them with a bold new multicultural approach Using numerous case examples drawn from their years of practice with Asian Caribbean African American and Hispanic clients the authors Describe proven techniques for assessing culturally diverse children parents and couples Develop a proven Multicultural Multimodal Multi systems Multi CMS approach to intervention Expose the cultural biases at the core of conventional mental health training Outline the major competencies needed to develop a trainee s multicultural skills and develop alternative approaches to clinical training
