Did You Know?

The Columbia Icefield is a major source of fresh water. Melt water from the icefield feeds rivers that flow to the Arctic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, and Hudson's Bay.

The Columbia Icefield is the largest mass of ice in North America below the Arctic Circle. The icefield lies across the Alberta–British Columbia border in the Rockies. Six large glaciers flow from the icefield. One of them, the Athabasca Glacier, is a popular tourist destination in Jasper National Park.

The Athabasca Glacier has been melting for over a century. The front edge or “snout” of the glacier has been receding at an average of approximately 12 m per year. At that rate, how far would it recede in four years?
