

What does the paper discuss that has been argued about?

Types of political systems already in place should influence how countries evolve and are shaped off their original positions according to the "Political Function" (1).

The following paragraph that has not been highlighted in the document also supports evidence that institutions are the main driver.

Is political structure more likely to change?

Example: India, which has democratic institutions

Why are these states an important finding?

In general, the paper suggests that institutions in the world are more democratic than the ones that are not, and that the ones that are not are more likely to change than the ones that are.

What does the paper discuss about the role of institutions in the world?

Example: India, which has democratic institutions, and the ones that are not
