These authors also found that the use of a single, unidirectional, one-way communication channel (e.g., a one-way video screen) was less effective than a two-way, bidirectional, two-way communication channel (e.g., a two-way video screen) in reducing the number of errors made by participants. This finding is consistent with the idea that a two-way communication channel is more effective than a one-way communication channel in reducing the number of errors made by participants.

There is no question that the use of the term "discovery" in the patent law is a matter of interpretation. The courts have often been divided on the issue, and the Supreme Court has recently held that the term "discovery" is not a term of art, but a term of common usage. The Court has also held that the term "discovery" is not a term of art, but a term of common usage. The Court has also held that the term "discovery" is not a term of art, but a term of common usage.
