1. The authors may also wish to include some brief word about their isochronous criterion of what must be accomplished in the individual cell during these periods. The criterion should not be too strict, as the authors indicated in a reply letter, but some degree of reduction in activity level should be required. The authors also state that the animals were kept in the dark during the periods of activity. This is not a good idea, as the animals may become disoriented and the results may be affected. The authors should also state whether the animals were kept in the dark during the periods of activity.

There have been attempts to establish special monitoring and assessment programmes for contaminated areas. During winter, from 1998 to 2000, in Southern China, about 100,000 people in six coastal provinces and municipalities and 100,000 people in the inland provinces were tested for lead, cadmium, mercury, and other heavy metals. The results showed that the levels of these metals in the blood of the general population were within the normal range. However, the levels of these metals in the blood of the people living in the coastal areas were higher than those of the people living in the inland areas.

8. The above 1994-1995 survey, conducted after nearly 10 years' civil war, is the first ever undertaken in great cooperation with armed and the insurgents, and the first attempt to use the number of insurgents remaining in the field and the armed wing of the insurgency to estimate the number of insurgents that the state, in total, is trying to fight, because the number of the armed wing of the insurgency is the number of the state's security forces, and the number of the armed wing of the insurgency is the number of the state's security forces.
