Dawson, 2020-12-17 Swing trading is a type of trading that attempts to take advantage of short-term price movements in a few days to several weeks Swing traders primarily use technical analysis to identify trading opportunities They are analyzing price trends and patterns Swing trading involves buying and selling securities over a period of days to weeks in an attempt to profit from short-term price movements Swing trading is a trader's version of day trading and works at a much smaller scale than day trading Swing traders can't rely on technical analysis alone to make trading decisions profits or losses based on a trader's entry and exit points or price trends Typically swing traders hold positions for more than a trading session but usually not longer than a few weeks or a couple of months They generally trade in the middle of a trading range rather than at the extremes This is a rare outcome that is brought about by extremely low volatility The goal of swing trading is to capture a portion of a potential price move While some traders seek out volatile stocks with lots of movement they prefer more stable stocks In swing trading the trader is not looking for asset returns likely to move in a position and then capturing a profit if the price moves in the desired direction looking to capture a portion of the price move and then move on to the next opportunity Swing trading is one of the most popular trading strategies where traders look for short-term price movements using various forms of technical analysis If you are interested in swing trading you should become familiar with the technical analysis tools and the nature of the trades The fundamental principles of swing trading are the same as those of day trading but the trader is looking for
