

The importance of being on time in the Army

The importance of being on time in the Army is a part of discipline, which was instilled in new enlisted soldiers during their basic training.

- Being on time shows reliability.

We have to show discipline, responsibility, show care through following army rules and regulations. Being on time not only pertains to accountability, but shows respect to our fellow soldiers, our unit, command and organization as a whole. Being on time also will avoid any disciplinary actions that may hinder you from reaching your goals. Being on time may have a greater importance and effect, than we may know. Being on time enables us to be able to trust and rely on each other in life and death situations. It also shows that we will be able and ready to capitalize on our capabilities to complete our missions.

It is not acceptable to be late (except when involving safety limitations), because missions and operations are interlocking pieces that must function together as a whole in order for it to work in a timely manner. All successful and respective people all have one common attribute, and this is knowing and exhibiting the importance of being on time.

- Being on time shows discipline.

"Discipline is what holds units together in order to accomplish assigned missions. It is the sum of the genuine acceptance of the army values". All who enlist in the United States army will agree with this statement. Discipline is the key to success.
