Human lung capacity is an issue made possible by pleural cavity - negative pressure in pleural cavity. One way to measure volume of pleural cavity is by measuring lung capacity. Lung capacity can also be measured using a spirometer. This data provides very precise measurements of lung volume using a spirometer device.

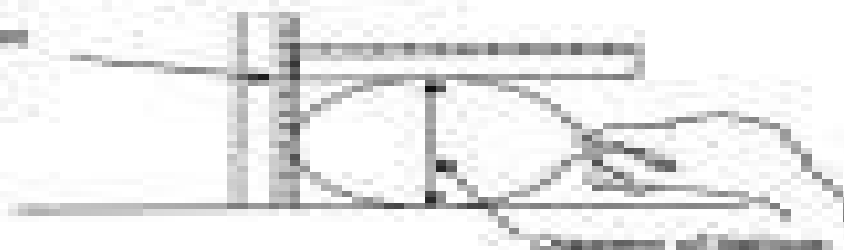

Several different lung volume measurements can be made:

1. Tidal volume is the largest possible amount of air that can be inhaled after breathing a normal breath.
2. Expiratory reserve is the amount of air that can be inhaled in the lungs after exhaling normally (it is the portion that remains inhaled air).
3. Total volume is the amount of air that can be inhaled during normal breathing.

Part A: Measuring

1. Measure the balloon circumference.
2. Use an elastic string or cord. Then divide all the air into one-half the balloon and push the balloon through the opening in the opening.
3. Measure and record the diameter of the balloon in centimeters (see Data Table below). The difference between the two measurements is the diameter of the balloon.

Record circumference when the length of the balloon is the same as the radius of the balloon (see table). This is the balloon's diameter.

4. Calculate the balloon's diameter and record the result. Record the diameter of the balloon in your Data Table.
5. Repeat steps 1-4 for the LAST PAPER (the one that is the most difficult to push into the opening).

1	19.5	2000 2625
2	19.5	2625
3	20	2750
