Abstract in vitro fertilization (IVF) and intracytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI) are assisted reproductive techniques (ART) that have increased the number of children born globally since the 1970s. However, IVF and ICSI are associated with an increased risk of adverse pregnancy outcomes, including preterm birth, low birth weight, and stillbirth. The purpose of this study was to investigate the association between IVF and ICSI and adverse pregnancy outcomes. A retrospective cohort study was conducted using data from the National Birth Defects Prevention Study (NBDPS), a population-based surveillance system for birth defects in the United States. The study included 1,141 IVF pregnancies and 1,141 ICSI pregnancies, matched to 1,141 natural conceptions. The results showed that IVF and ICSI pregnancies were associated with an increased risk of preterm birth, low birth weight, and stillbirth compared to natural conceptions. The risk of preterm birth was 1.5 times higher for IVF and 1.8 times higher for ICSI. The risk of low birth weight was 1.3 times higher for IVF and 1.6 times higher for ICSI. The risk of stillbirth was 1.2 times higher for IVF and 1.4 times higher for ICSI. These findings suggest that IVF and ICSI are associated with an increased risk of adverse pregnancy outcomes, and further research is needed to understand the underlying mechanisms.
