Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group performed no exercise. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the 400-meter walk test (400MWT). Secondary outcomes included changes in heart rate (HR), blood pressure (BP), and health-related quality of life (HRQL), measured by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the training program significantly improved physical fitness, HR, and BP in the intervention group compared to the control group. There was no significant difference in HRQL between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and cardiovascular health in sedentary, middle-aged adults.

Abstract

These studies indicate an important role for a person's understanding of the world as well as the social norms and expectations that influence their behavior.
