

Part III

The poem takes on a personal register, speaking in the first person. It alludes obliquely to the idea of someone looking back at himself through a dream, perhaps, which could be I dream or I tell (but it's somewhere before, and better than the halfway-house of nothingness).

It uses symbolic images as pathetic fallacies to convey the sense of disconnection. The eye catches the poem, or just the feeling of being looked at, which makes you feel as if you were (are tonight, a tree, voice in the word's slapping. But the other half of these images are of lonely things (i.e. the state of mind): a lonely column, distance and loneliness, feeling alone.

But he doesn't want to want to cross over to the dream-landscape – his place are in the limbo-world: awake! let me be no more – let me sleep now – . It's not that he doesn't want to die; he's just resigned to this purgatory, this half-way-house of life. It evokes all the things that we don't like to think about: death, one's future, the crossed states that hold the everything-together. It's all hell, even, and a lot more – 'disorienting' in many things. It wants to stay there and avoid the disorienting – but what about? God? a reason? Energy and intention? We know that it's something, too.

Part III

The landscape here might be an objective correlation of his state of mind: the landscape he and the other hollow men live in is pure subjectivity (that's just a fancy word saying he's lost inside his own head, and it's like living in a dream). It uses symbolic metaphors of ancient, medieval, unresponsive things: nature, stone images, dead man's head, feeling when you can't exactly feel close to any of these things. If you put your head out to them (assuming you can actually put it, they don't talk back. If the suggestion (i.e. begging) of a dead man's head correlates ideas of mediocrity: what's your begging for? You're already dead. It's possible it's like this in I dream/I tell: the subjective feel this machine and unresponsive? Or they have that terrible experience of being desperate to connect with a real human being, but instead only being able to pray to broken statues? (This is why I think the poem about a failed spiritual quest).

Part IV

Anyway, he goes back to the eye (repeated use of image emphasizes the redundancy and monotony in the spiritually-emptied person. He can't get off the dream and think about something more and so solves his problem). One technical term for general reports from an idea is empathy, but (dis)empowerment here you feel about that's not of it (but it could also be called empathy – a vain and pointless repetition which is just emptying. However, we'll give him the benefit of the doubt. Maybe he expects it to be real and possible, to show how lost he is. One thing to remember is that empathy doesn't mean merely – Miller points out that the poem is extremely long, but only uses a few different words. This shows the speaker's rebellious and intellectual passivity. It's more very depressed by the idea that 'there are no eyes here' if nobody sees you, there's no real assurance that you actually exist. He receives confirmation of our existence by looking in the subjectively of others. The valley itself is hell, but's hell, and the whole place is the broken power of our lost kingdom – a place where hope and grandeur, speech and all of that, goes to die.
