Background: Previous risk reduction studies in young women through the internet, focused on general risk-reduction strategies, such as using condoms, limiting sexual partners, etc. Such internet interventions aimed for behavioural change using health-promoters. They were either provided once (one-time) or several times (ongoing). However, based on preliminary findings, individuals in the greater young women's (GYW) network, those with no sexual partners, were not reached.

Notes on the Publisher: I first proposed portraits of American authors like I did here and it was rejected.

Abstract

Plumbers collected this species between 1930 and 1940 on a long stretch of road and two gulches. Plumes began showing strongly (especially after eggs were removed) in the adult plumage of females. The plumage of the females grew and then growth arrested and broke into patches of brown, buff and black and white. The plumage of the female during moult was called
