

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are located. The liver is the largest organ in the body, and it is responsible for producing bile, a substance that helps in the digestion of fats. The pancreas is a small, elongated organ that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help in the digestion of carbohydrates, proteins, and fats. The gallbladder is a small, pear-shaped organ that stores bile.

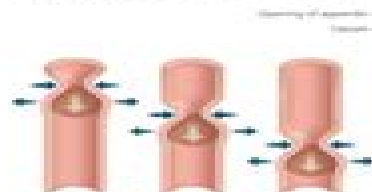

Layers of large intestine

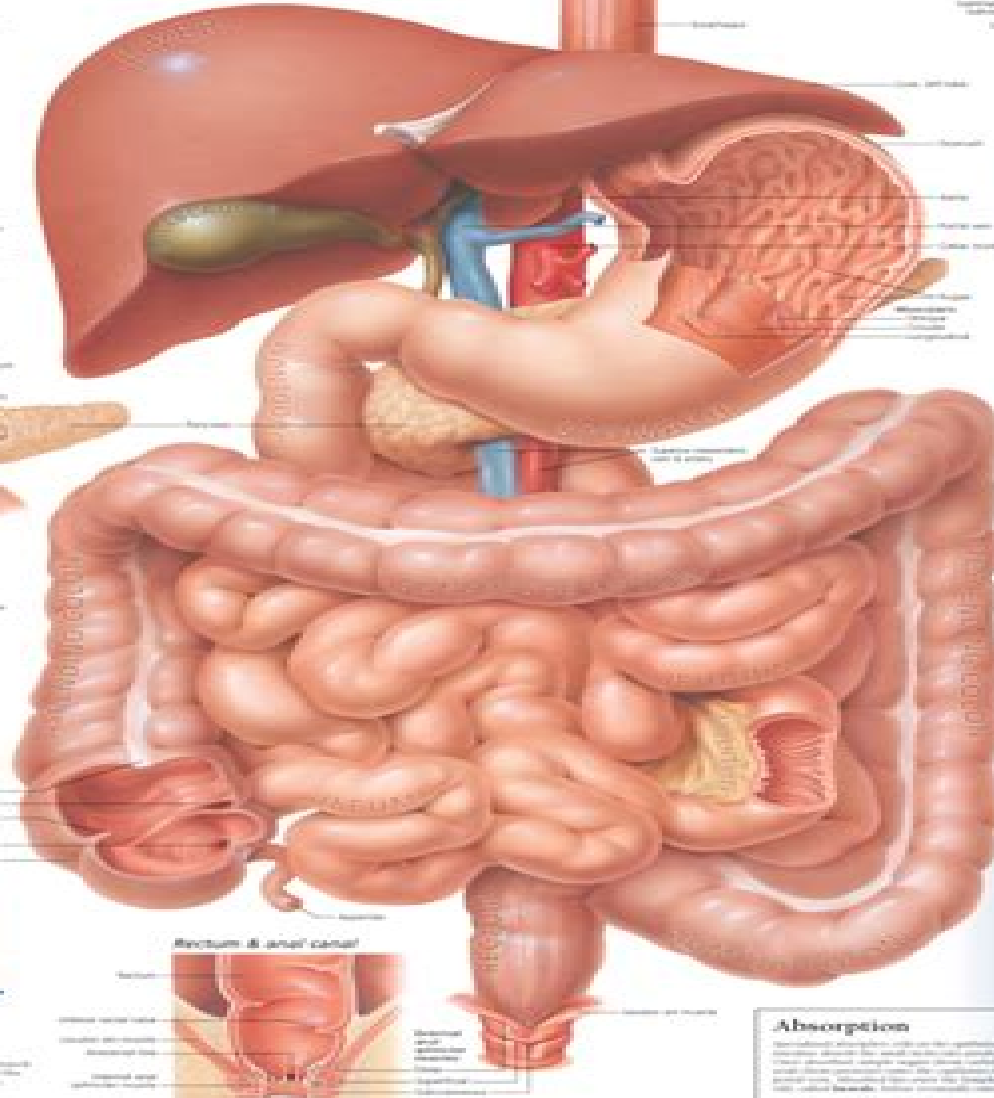

Large intestine

The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into several parts, including the cecum, ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, and sigmoid colon. The large intestine ends at the rectum and anus.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the swallowing reflex and the defecation reflex, which are controlled by the brain.

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. The tongue then moves the food into the esophagus, where it is swallowed. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, a fluid that contains enzymes that help in the digestion of carbohydrates.

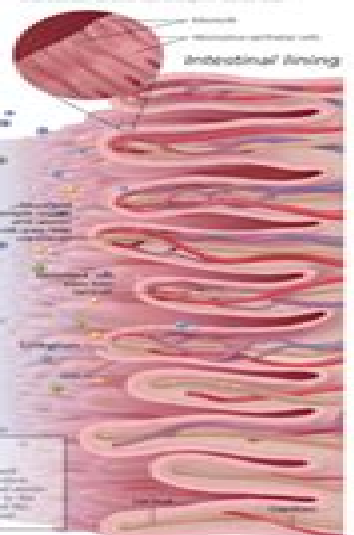

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardiac region, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pyloric region, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled organ that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. The small intestine is characterized by its coiled structure, which increases its surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption is the final step in the digestion of food. It involves the movement of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining, which is composed of villi, small finger-like projections that increase the surface area for absorption.
