Woodland Conservation and Management G. F. Peterken, 2013-11-11 Professor John Harper in his recent Population Biology of Plants 1977 made a comment and asked a question which effectively states the theme of this book Noting that one of the consequences of the development of the theory of vegetational climax has been to guide the observer's mind forwards i.e. that vegetation is interpreted as a stage on the way to something he commented that it might be more healthy and scientifically more sound to look more often backwards and search for the explanation of the present in the past to explain systems in relation to their history rather than their goal He went on to contrast the disaster theory of plant succession which holds that communities are a response to the effects of past disasters with the climax theory that they are stages in the approach to a climax state and then asked do we account most completely for the characteristics of a population by a knowledge of its history or of its destiny Had this question been put to R S Adamson E J Salisbury A G Tansley or A S Watt who are amongst the giants of the first forty years of woodland ecology in Britain their answer would surely have been that understanding lies in a knowledge of destiny Whilst not unaware of the historical facts of British woodlands they were preoccupied with ideas of natural succession and climax and tended to interpret their observations in these terms

Woodland Conservation and Management

George Peterken, 2012-12-06 Professor John Harper in his recent Population Biology of Plants 1977 made a comment and asked a question which effectively states the theme of this book. Noting that one of the consequences of the development of the theory of vegetational climax has been to guide the observer's mind forwards i.e. that vegetation is interpreted as a stage on the way to something, he commented that it might be more healthy and scientifically more sound to look more often backwards and search for the explanation of the present in the past to explain systems in relation to their history rather than their goal. He went on to contrast the disaster theory of plant succession which holds that communities are a response to the effects of past disasters with the climax theory that they are stages in the approach to a climax state and then asked: do we account most completely for the characteristics of a population by a knowledge of its history or of its destiny? Had this question been put to R. S. Adams, E. J. Salisbury, A. G. Tansley or A. S. Watt who are amongst the giants of the first forty years of woodland ecology in Britain, their answer would surely have been that understanding lies in a knowledge of destiny. Whilst not unaware of the historical facts of British woodlands, they were preoccupied with ideas of natural succession and climax and tended to interpret their observations in these terms.

Management Planning for Nature Conservation Mike Alexander, 2012-12-05
The first edition of Mike Alexander's Management Planning for Nature Conservation brought a new dimension to the modern literature on conservation management. This second edition, a significant enhancement of the original, deals with the development both conceptual and practical of adaptive management planning for nature conservation. It is about preparing management plans and guides the reader through the entire process. Case studies including a conservation and access plan demonstrate the planning process in action. This approach to planning can be applied to any place which is managed entirely or in part for wildlife. It can be applied to the management of species or habitats in any circumstance regardless of site designation. The process is fully compatible with the Convention on Biological Diversity's ecosystem approach to conservation management. Mike Alexander has long been at the forefront of developing management planning for conservation with experience ranging from Uganda to Estonia and from Costa Rica to Wales. He is the General Secretary of the Conservation Management System Consortium, a group of organisations with a common aim of raising standards and developing best practice in conservation management and planning. In 2012, Mike Alexander was elected a Fellow of the Society of Biology in recognition of his contribution to nature conservation and in particular management planning.
