Few studies have examined the effects of a single session of a group-based, self-help, cognitive-behavioral program on the self-efficacy and self-management skills of people with type 2 diabetes. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the effects of a 1-hr group-based self-help program on the self-efficacy and self-management skills of people with type 2 diabetes. The program was based on the Diabetes Self-Management Education and Support (DSMES) model and was designed to be delivered by a community health worker. The program was evaluated in a randomized controlled trial. The results of the trial showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the self-efficacy and self-management skills of people with type 2 diabetes. The program was well accepted by the participants and was found to be a cost-effective way to deliver diabetes self-management education. The results of this study suggest that a single session of a group-based self-help program can have a positive effect on the self-efficacy and self-management skills of people with type 2 diabetes. Further research is needed to evaluate the long-term effects of the program and to determine the optimal duration and frequency of the program.

Economic growth is the primary goal of most governments. The growth of the economy is measured by the gross domestic product (GDP), which is the total value of all goods and services produced in a country. GDP is calculated by adding up the value of all final goods and services produced in a country. The GDP is a measure of the size of the economy and is used to compare the economic performance of different countries. The GDP is also used to measure the growth of the economy over time. The growth of the economy is measured by the percentage change in the GDP from one year to the next. The growth of the economy is a key indicator of the health of the economy and is used by governments to make decisions about economic policy.

Eco-efficient Materials for Mitigating Building Cooling Needs F. Pacheco-Torgal, Joao Labrincha, Luisa F. Cabeza, Claes-Göran Granqvist, 2015-02-27 Climate change is one of the most important environmental problems faced by Planet Earth The majority of CO₂ emissions come from burning fossil fuels for energy production and improvements in energy efficiency shows the greatest potential for any single strategy to abate global greenhouse gas GHG emissions from the energy sector Energy related emissions account for almost 80% of the EU s total greenhouse gas emissions The building sector is the largest energy user responsible for about 40% of the EU s total final energy consumption In Europe the number of installed air conditioning systems has increased 500% over the last 20 years but in that same period energy cooling needs have increased more than 20 times The increase in energy cooling needs relates to the current higher living and working standards In urban environments with low outdoor air quality the general case this means that in summer time one cannot count on natural ventilation to reduce cooling needs Do not forget the synergistic effect between heat waves and air pollution which means that outdoor air quality is worse in the summer aggravating cooling needs Over the next few years this phenomenon will become much worse because more people will live in cities more than 2 billion by 2050 and global warming will aggravate cooling needs An overview of materials to lessen the impact of urban heat islands Excellent coverage of building materials to reduce air conditioning needs Innovative products discussed such as Thermo and Electrochromic materials
