Definitions of titles United States Employment Service, 1965 Solid Dynamics Kazuo Arakawa, 2021-05-21 This book discusses solid dynamics with energy dissipation characteristics based on fundamental studies of friction impact and fracture Friction is one of the most significant physical phenomena in daily life and has thus been widely studied since ancient times The force of static friction is given by  $F = \mu N$  where  $\mu$  is the coefficient of friction and  $N$  is the contact force at the interface However many aspects of dynamic friction are still not well understood This book presents fundamental studies on dynamic sliding friction based on experimental and model analyses and demonstrates a number of findings First the sliding friction force in the dynamic case can be given by  $F_d = \mu_v F_N$  where  $\mu_v$  is a parameter related to the surface condition  $A$  is the contact area and  $v$  is the sliding velocity Second stick slip motion on flat surfaces can be represented by a mass spring system with a dashpot with damping constant  $c$  A Third the plowing force due to hard conical asperities on soft surfaces is given by  $F_p = \mu_p F_N$  where  $\mu_p$  is a parameter associated with the surface condition of the asperities  $A$  is the plowing cross sectional area and  $v$  is the sliding velocity of the asperities the damping factor  $c_p$  influences stick slip motion during the plowing process Friction also plays an important role in oblique impacts This book describes the effect of friction on the impact of golf balls First the impact behavior is studied using high speed video and the spin or angular velocity of the ball during impact is determined The contact area of the ball is also determined using a rigid transparent target Second the effect of friction on is described assuming that  $F = \mu N$  where  $\mu$  is a coefficient associated with the contact surface and  $dA/dt$  is the time derivative of the contact area A The friction effect is also derived using  $F_d = \mu_v F_N$  where  $\mu_v$  is qualitatively equivalent to the empirical relationship  $N = dA/dt$  Third the friction induced shear vibration of the ball can be predicted by an elastic sphere model given by  $F_d \propto v$  Similar to sliding friction dynamic fracture is also a representative feature of solid dynamics with energy dissipation characteristics A crack tip in brittle materials propagates dynamically and exhibits crack branching or arresting according to the crack acceleration or deceleration This phenomenon is qualitatively in accord with stick slip friction This book investigates dynamic crack propagation using the method of caustics and a high speed camera First the stress intensity factor  $K_d$  for the dynamic case is evaluated and correlated with crack velocity and acceleration Second these parameters are correlated with the change in roughness of the fracture surfaces Crack branching is also studied to understand the energy dissipation Third the relationship between  $K_d$  and crack velocity is examined based on the unloading rate of the specimen during crack propagation Different specimen geometries and loading methods are used to clarify the effect of solid dynamics
