

International Yearbook of Industrial Statistics

Global Highlights 2023

Industrial sectors, which comprise mining, manufacturing and the utilities sectors, grew by 2.3 per cent in 2022 globally. Manufacturing accounted for most of this dynamism, with an increase of 3.2 per cent, while the combined mining and utilities sector contracted by 0.9 per cent. Industry is expected to decelerate in 2023 due to mounting headwinds from various sources. While manufacturing drives industrial growth at the global level, in low-income economies the largest contributor remains the mining and utilities sector.

In recent years, the world seems to be navigating a double decoupling in manufacturing, one positive and one negative. On the positive side, there is evidence of a decoupling between manufacturing activity and CO₂ emissions, with emissions remaining relatively flat while production keeps increasing. This trend is evident in most country groups, although the levels of emission intensity remain high in most cases. On the negative side, there is also a decoupling between manufacturing production and employment. Indeed, higher levels of global manufacturing output have not translated into more jobs. In particular, the employment of women in manufacturing has followed a downward trend, further accelerated due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

A clear global development observed over the last decades is the rebalancing of manufacturing from high-income economies towards middle-income economies, as well as from Northern America and Europe towards Asia and Oceania. The COVID-19 crisis further accelerated this macro-level trend.

Another worldwide megatrend is the expanding importance of higher technology industries in manufacturing. These industries recovered faster post-COVID-19 and have continued expanding dynamically, while growth in lower technology industries has stalled. This divergence could further increase inequalities within and between countries.

Excepting high-income industrial economies and Latin America and the Caribbean, all regions and country groups have achieved progress towards SDG 9 since 2015, although the rate of progress has generally been insufficient to reach the global Goal by 2030. This is a particular cause of concern in least developed countries (LDCs), where industrialization is one of the most promising development strategies.

This edition of the Yearbook included a thematic chapter on innovation statistics. Existing indicators suggest that the world's most innovative economies are concentrated in Europe, Eastern Asia and Northern America. However, further investment in data are needed to fully measure the incidence, drivers, obstacles and impacts of industrial innovation and provide crucial information for guiding policies in this area.

The Growth Process in East Asian Manufacturing Industries Chia-Hung Sun, 2004-01-01 Although it has been previously accepted that Hong Kong Japan Korea Singapore and Taiwan have achieved the economic miracle of maintaining high economic growth for several decades prior to the Asian financial crisis recent literature has now cast doubt upon this economic supposed success Attempting to overcome methodological limitations and underlying assumptions of other studies The Growth Process in East Asian Manufacturing Industries re examines the role of total factor productivity TFP growth and aims to identify the sources of output growth in these East Asian economies Chia Hung Sun aims to explain how TFP growth differs from technological progress and demonstrates why this study favours the use of the varying coefficients frontier model rather than the conventional scholastic frontier approach He goes on to statistically test whether manufacturing industries in East Asia homogeneously applied the best practice production technology and investigates the TFP growth slowdown in East Asian manufacturing sectors

Institutional Change And The Development Of Industrial Clusters In China: Case Studies From The Textile And Clothing Industry Jinmin Wang, 2013-10-30 The book mainly uses the New Institutional Economics Approach NIE to examine the formation and development of industrial clusters in China through multiple case studies of textile and clothing clusters in the Zhejiang province The micro case studies illustrate the interaction between institutional change and the industrial development of China in transition It also attempts to fill the information gap through an analysis of the typical institutional factors leading to the development and upgrading of industrial clusters and provides a better understanding of the changing nature of the public private interface in the process of cluster development in China The Middle East and North Africa 2003 Eur, Yearbook of Legislation New York State Library,1907 Transformation of Resource Towns and Peripheries Greg Halseth,2016-07-01 Most developed economies including single industry and resource dependent rural or small town regions are transforming rapidly as a result of social political and economic change Collectively they face a number of challenges as well as new opportunities This international collaboration describes a critical political economy framework that will be useful for understanding these transitions Transformation of Resource Towns and Peripheries describes the multi faceted process of transition and change in resource dependent rural and small town regions since the end of the Second World War The book incorporates international case studies from Australia Canada Finland and New Zealand with the express purpose of highlighting similarities and differences in patterns and practices in each country Chapters explore three main themes how corporate ties and trade linkages are changing and impacting rural communities and regions how resource industry employment is changing in these small communities and how local community capacity and leadership are working to mitigate challenges and take advantage of new opportunities This book will be of interest to students of regional studies geography and rural and industrial sociology It will also have a strong appeal to policy makers and local regional development practitioners Uneven Tides Sheldon H. Danziger,Peter Gottschalk,1992-12-17 Inequality has been on the rise in America for more than two decades This socially divisive trend began in the economic doldrums of the 1970s and continued through the booming 1980s when surging economic tides clearly failed to lift all ships Instead escalating inequality in both individual earnings and family income widened the gulf between rich and poor and led to the much publicized decline of the middle class Uneven Tides brings together a distinguished group of economists to confront the crucial questions about this unprecedented rise in inequality Just how large and pervasive was it What were its principal causes And why did it continue in the 1980s when previous periods of national economic growth have generally reduced inequality Reviewing the best current evidence the essays in Uneven Tides show that rising inequality is a complex phenomenon the result of a web of circumstances inherent in the nation s current industrial social and political situation Once attributed to the rising supply of inexperienced workers as baby boomers new immigrants and women entered the labor market the growing inequality in individual earnings is revealed in Uneven Tides to be the direct result of the economy s increasing demand for skilled workers The authors explore many of the possible causes of this trend including the employment shift from manufacturing to the service sector the heightened importance of technology in the workplace the decline of unionization and the intensified efforts to compete in a global marketplace Uneven Tides also examines the equally dramatic growth in the inequality of family income and reviews the effects of family size the age and education of household heads and the transition to both two earner and single parent families Although these demographic shifts played a role what emerges most clearly is an understanding of the powerful influence of public policy as increasingly regressive taxes declining welfare benefits and a stagnant minimum wage continue to amplify the effects of market forces on income. With the rise in inequality now much in the headlines it is clear that our nation's ability to reverse these shifting currents requires deeper understanding of their causes and consequences. Uneven Tides is the first book to get beyond the news stories to a clear analysis of the changing fortunes of America's families. It should be required reading for anyone with a serious interest in the economic underpinnings of the country's social problems. Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications United States. Superintendent of Documents, 1993. The Dynamics of Socio-Economic Development Adam Szirmai, 2005-01-20. Why are poor countries poor and rich countries rich? How are wealth and poverty related to changes in nutrition, health, life expectancy, education, population growth, and politics? This modern, non-technical 2005 introduction to development studies explores the dynamics of socio-economic development and stagnation in developing countries. Taking a quantitative and comparative approach to contemporary debates within their broader context, Szirmai examines historical, institutional, demographic, sociological, political, and cultural factors. Key chapters focus on economic growth, technological change, industrialisation, agricultural development, and consider social dimensions such as population growth, health, and education. Each chapter contains comparative statistics on trends from a sample of twenty-nine developing countries. This rich statistical database allows students to strengthen their understanding of comparative development experiences. Assuming no prior knowledge of economics, the book is suited for use in interdisciplinary development studies programmes as well as economics courses and will also interest practitioners pursuing careers in developing countries. Monthly Review of the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1918. Yearbook of Legislation, 1903-[08].
