

Activity 1:

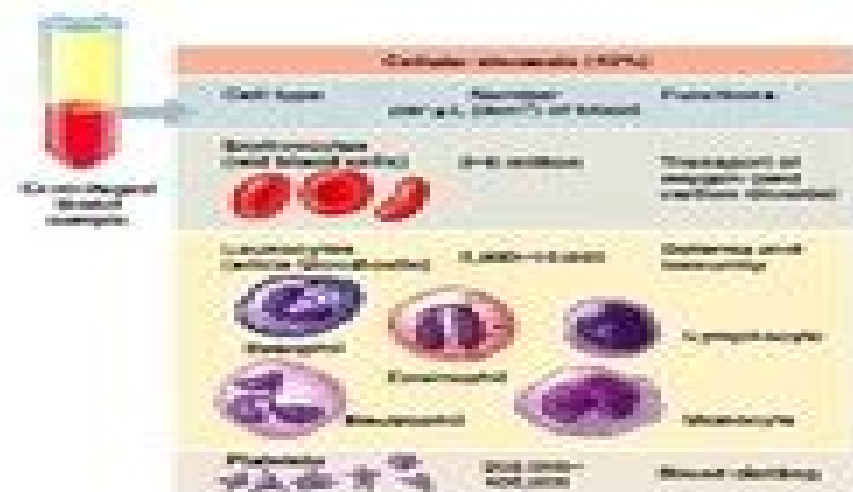

Blood is a connective tissue that has a matrix made up of a fluid, we call plasma, with a variety of cells suspended inside. Plasma consists of 90% water and the remainder is composed of various nutrients, gases, proteins, and electrolytes. The cells suspended inside the plasma include erythrocytes (red blood cells), leukocytes (white blood cells), and thrombocytes (platelets). Plasma accounts for 55% of total blood volume, while the packed cells (hematocrit) account for 45% of the total blood volume.

Erythrocytes, or RBC's, will appear pale or dark pink in a prepared microscopic slide depending on effectiveness of staining. In a microscopic blood smear slide, the RBC's will be the most numerous cells within the viewing field as their numbers average about 4.5 million to 5.5 million cells per cubic mm of blood. RBC's are biconcave discs that appear pale in the center due to the lack of hemoglobin concentration in the center. The concave structure of RBC's gives them a thinness that allows them to get into small spaces. RBC's are anucleated, meaning they lack a nucleus. Their lack of nucleus gives them a short life span of only 120 days. After 120 days they are broken down by the spleen and liver. RBC's are responsible for transporting oxygen and carbon dioxide. RBC's are composed of hemoglobin which is responsible for carrying the oxygen and carbon dioxide.
