

Fight Club Report.

There are 3 relative audience theories that I am going to apply to my questionnaire results on Fight Club.

The first Theory is the Gratification Theory also known as The Blumler and Katz theory. This theory is that the audience uses the media to help them fulfil their basic needs. This is usually to make them happy, for education reasons or for social reasons. This is a way of diverting or escaping, known as diversion. Diversion is a way of escaping reality for the audience. For example, people who watch shows such as The Walking Dead have an hour a week where they can just relax and escape from the rest of the world into this different universe inside the show. The theory is also that it's a way of personal relationships, and identity. This helps especially in social situation where a group of friends can interact and talk about the media.

Another theory is the Hypodermic Needle Theory. This is a theory that the media is changing the way the audience thinks. It does this by "injecting" thoughts and feelings into the audience's head. Media can send powerful images and influence a mass amount of people and make them act a certain way. For example, in the American election, Hillary Clinton uses Celebrities and news to tell people to vote her. This makes people automatically think this is the right decision to make.

The third and final theory is the Reception Theory. This is a theory that the media is encoded by the creators and then decoded by the audience. Audiences have three different readings of a media depending on their back grounds. These readings are, Preferred, Negotiated or Oppositional. This all has a lot to do with age and Gender.

The film Fight club is film directed by David Finger and released in 1999 Starring Brad Pitt and Edward Norton. The film got a certificate of 18 after being banned at first for having too much violence. The film is about a salesman finding a new form of therapy. This ends up starting an underground "Fight Club" this then escalated and spiralled out of control.

BBFC (British Board of Film Classification) had opened up a case study on the film. They were the first people to view the film as critics will view the film and give their reviews. BBFC didn't ban the film straight away. They made a good point and changed their guidelines.

"The new BBFC Guidelines established the principle that adults should be free to chose their own entertainment, within the law, and it was considered that there was nothing in Fight Club that was in breach of UK law, or felt to be harmful." This basically is saying people should be free to watch a violent film if they wanted too. People who don't like it don't have to watch it. This is big reason to why it got the 18 rated certificate and didn't get banned.

Another famous review of the film is by Alexander Walker where he slated the film. He mentions how he doesn't like certain aspects of the film. He says he thinks it's a way of propaganda and goes on about political points and compares it to Hitler and sending the Jews to their deaths. I think this is more Oppositional reading of the film, and definitely applies to the Reception Theory. Alexander decoded this film in a bad way, and as he never once said anything good about this film. I can tell this all applies to the reception theory because it's a more personal reading, it's all based on how he groups up and his own
