

EDUCATIONAL SCIENCES: THEORY & PRACTICE

Likert-type scale (1=nonrelevant; 2=slightly relevant; 3=partially relevant; 4=very relevant; 5=totally relevant). Cronbach alpha coefficients were calculated for each subscale. The internal consistency reliabilities were .89 for democratic, .82 for protective-demanding and .78 for authoritarian parenting styles and test-retest reliability coefficients were respectively .92, .75, and .79 (Kargun & Elidokanoglu, 2006 as cited in Ersoikan, 2006). In this study, Cronbach's alpha for the democratic subscale .87, protective-demanding subscale .83, and authoritarian subscale was calculated .77.

Procedures

The permit for data collection was obtained from Mogyia Provincial Directorate of National Education, and the data were gathered from the randomly selected schools and classes by researchers. The data collection procedure was carried out by providing students with the appropriate environment and sufficient time for answering the questions in groups in the classrooms.

Data Analysis

In this study, the analysis of relationships between anxiety sensitivity and parenting styles was performed by Pearson Product-Moment Correlation analysis and multiple hierarchical regression analysis. The data were investigated from the point of erroneous or missing values, outlier values, and multicollinearity in data analysis. The values considered to be entered erroneously were corrected as the erroneous values analysis. In the missing values analysis, randomly remaining few blank items were assigned values by Expectation-Maximization algorithm (Green & Salkind, 2008; Miyers, Gamst & Gravens, 2008). In the outlier analysis, 13 observations, which have Mahalanobis (1986) distance value greater than the $\chi^2_{.001, 32.50}$ table value, were excluded from the data set. The low level bivariate correlation values show that there is no multicollinearity among the independent variables. It has been seen that Variance Inflation Factor value is less than 5, the tolerance value is greater than .20, the condition index is less than 30, and consequently 543 observations remain in the data set.

Results

According to the results of this research there is a significant relationships between anxiety sensitivity and parenting styles and perceived parenting styles important predictors of anxiety sensitivity for high school students. Table 1 shows that anxiety sensitivity is positively related to protective-demanding and authoritarian parenting styles, and negatively related to democratic parenting style. Table 2 shows that anxiety sensitivity is significantly explained by the democratic, protective-demanding, and authoritarian parenting styles ($R^2=.54$, $R^2=.28$, $R^2=.46$ 02, $p<.001$). These parenting styles significantly explained 28.1% of the total variation in anxiety sensitivity. According to results of a t test that was intended to determine which parenting styles predict anxiety sensitivity, it was found that democratic style ($t=-4.327$, $p<.001$), protective-demanding style ($t=4.519$, $p<.001$), and authoritarian style ($t=4.841$, $p<.001$) were significant predictors of anxiety sensitivity. The results of the research are thought to give important information about the formation of anxiety sensitivity in adolescence.

Discussion

It has been found that there are significant relationships between anxiety sensitivity and parenting styles. It can be concluded from the research findings that adolescents' perceived negative parenting styles may be a precursor to anxiety sensitivity. There is clear evidence for a relation between perceived parenting styles and children's psychological functioning. For example, Maccoby et al. (2002) found that perceived parental pressure correlated positively with trait anxiety and with anxiety sensitivity. Conversely, parental warmth was positively associated with active coping and negatively with anxiety (Lundin & Stone, 1992). Children raised with authoritarian parenting style don't get what they need either (Elidokanoglu, 1996; Kargun, 1972). They grow up to be extremely self, and either critical. They are judgemental in the same ways their parents were judgemental in the Elidokanoglu, 1996). As adults, they become either very positive or withdrawn, and tremendously insecure, anxious, or they become like the abusive, controlling authoritarian that raised them. Constant parental interventions in situations of child distress or situations of perceived physical danger may increase the likelihood of the child misperceiving the physical symptoms associated with anxiety as harmful, thus, these become feelings and situations to be feared and avoided (Maccoby & Bradley, 1994; Oll, 1990; Sargent, 1990). The authoritarian parent is demanding, but unresponsive to the child, tends to use positive and harsh punishments, physical reinforcement, reprimands, and prohibitive inter-
